Main Points of Interest to be seen in Quebec

QUEBEC is the most historical city on the American continent. Every foot of its soil recalls the memory of the early days. Relics of the years gone by can be found all over this town. Strangers notice in Quebec a different atmosphere that makes this wonderful city most interesting.

Here are, for tourists, some of the main points of interest that can be seen.

On this small folder we hardly have enough space to just mention some of the most interesting Historical spots, we suggest that, for details, tourists should hire one of the licensed Historical Guides available at $1.00 per hour, from the Quebec Automobile Club's office and from every hotel.

(6) This house served in 1812-13 as a place of confinement for prisoners. It was later owned by Dr. Arnoux and used since as Military offices.

Starting from the magnificent Chateau Frontenac hotel, the tourist will have the opportunity to appreciate the famous Dufferin Terrace, Quebec's fashionable promenade. Under the Terrace, lay the foundations of the old historical Castle of St-Louis, destroyed by fire in 1834 and replaced by the actual Chateau Frontenac.

At one end of the Terrace stand the old fortification walls, built about 1883 and at the other end the statue of Samuel de Champlain, the gallant founder of Quebec (1608).

(4) Hôtel-Dieu Hospital, Quebec, founded in 1693 by Duchess d'Aiguillon, niece of famous Cardinal Richelieu. Most ancient institution of its kind in America.

Back of the Terrace, alongside the Chateau Frontenac, are the Governor's Garden and the Wolfe-Montcalm monument, erected in 1828.

Passing under the arch of the Chateau, the Court-House is on the left with the Anglican Cathedral alongside, built in 1804 on the site of the ancient church of the Recollets.

On the other side of the street: the "Rond de Chênes" (Place d'Armes Square) near stood a fort where the Huron Indians took refuge under the shelter of the French guns. The Place d'Armes was the "Grande Place" for military parades and public meetings during the French regime.

(5) Quebec Automobile Club headquarters at Corner Buade and Garden Streets, facing City Hall and the Old Basilica. Situated on the most easy accessible spot of Quebec. All tourists welcomed for free road information and assistance of any kind.

Right opposite the Place d'Armes, facing the Chateau stood an edifice of extraordinary interest used as residence of Gouverneur d'Ailleboust, in 1649. The present building was erected in 1805 and was the meeting place of the "Bons Vivants Club". Later on was used as Parliament of Canada and Parliament offices. There, originated the earlier legislation of Canada. Every inch of ground in this neighborhood is historical.

A little further is the General Post Office built in 1872 on the site of the romantic Golden Dog Hotel; the Bishop Laval's Monument in front, and opposite the Cardinal's Palace.

Across the street: the Montmorency Park with Sir George Etienne Cartier's monument, erected in 1920, where stood the first Episcopal Palace built by Mgr de St-Vallier in 1689, used as Parliament Building from 1792 to 1834. Further down can be seen the Grand Battery on the
